DETECTED ISSUES & GUIDED SOLUTIONS

ISSUE CATEGORY: Health Care, Masked Distress

Patient Statement: "I'm not good, I'm not doing good today Mr. Akhil. I have a very bad chest pain."

Recommended Action: As an AI model, I can provide some general guidance but please note that this should not replace professional medical advice. If a patient is experiencing severe chest pain, it is critical that they seek immediate medical attention, as this could be a sign of a serious condition such as a heart attack or other cardiovascular issues. Here are some steps for basic advice:

1. *Seek Immediate Help: Encourage the patient to contact emergency services right away or visit the nearest emergency room. Chest pain should always be taken seriously.
2. *Rest: Advise the patient to sit down and try to remain calm while help is on the way. Avoid any physical exertion.
3. *Medication: If the patient has been prescribed medication for heart conditions or chest pain (such as nitroglycerin), they should take it as directed by their healthcare provider.
4. *Avoid Eating or Drinking: Unless instructed by a healthcare professional, the patient should avoid eating or drinking anything until they have been assessed by medical personnel.

Remind the patient that these are general suggestions and the importance of consulting with a healthcare provider for a thorough assessment and appropriate treatment.
